Indiana Public Health Training Center Selects Coggno to Implement Their New Learning Management System

(June 23, 2011, Campbell, CA) Indiana Public Health Training Center (IPHTC) has selected Coggno Learning Management System, a leading provider of online learning software, to implement a learning management system to assist employees with improving their skills along with improving public health practices for the benefit of all residents of the Hoosier state.

Coggno's Learning Management System will assist IPHTC with delivering training and curricula to public health professionals throughout the state via a centralized database. Members will be able to log in online to access the materials they need to upgrade their skills, knowledge, and abilities. Management and administration have access to the progress of their employees, as well as the ability to evaluate and test in order to gauge professional development.

IPHTC believes that educational programs play an integral role in ensuring that public health professionals have the skills they need to enhance their lives, as well as the lives of those they serve. IPHTC recognizes that learning poses certain challenges for adults, especially those who work in the public sector; a learning management system provides ease of use and access to materials in a casual setting that allows for greater comprehension and convenience. This type of educational tool will allow public health professionals to obtain the skills and training they need to remain effective servants of the community, while enhancing their knowledge outside a traditional learning environment. IPHTC chose to partner with Coggno because their learning management system provides exceptional ease of use, flexibility and the ability to ramp up quickly so that health professionals can continue to effectively meet the demands of a growing population.

IPHTC prides itself on creating opportunities for health professionals, as well as students, to expand their base of knowledge. Coggno is proud to provide the software platform that will enable individuals to access and utilize live Web streams, Internet courses, Podcast and other forms of online learning to advocate for better quality forms of public health care.

Coggno Learning Management System enables all types of organizations to use technology to provide educational services through high-quality online curricula that are universally accessible. Coggno's executive team and advisors deliver content and relevant training through state-of-the art technology that allows participants to interact with the educational vehicle. For more information, please visit Coggno's Web site.
